THE ARTICLE

From <http://www.BreakingNewsEnglish.com/1012/101207-banknotes.html>

A French banknote printer is attempting to buy its UK rival in a move that has upset the British company. France's Oberthur made a cash offer for De La Rue, the world's largest maker of banknotes. Its shares immediately jumped 30 per cent at the news. De La Rue's board members have refused to consider the offer and have called it "highly preliminary and opportunistic". Analysts predict there will now be a bidding war in which Oberthur, or one of its other rivals, could offer more than $1 billion for the British printer. De La Rue's chairman, Nicholas Brookes, said that his board had "no hesitation" in rejecting Oberthur's bid. He said the offer was way too low and "does not begin to reflect De La Rue's fundamental value". He added there were "attractive medium and long-term prospects for the company."

De La Rue, despite having a French name, is very English. It was founded in 1813 by Thomas La Rue, who set up a business as a stationer and printer. His company moved into the production of postage stamps in 1860 and banknotes in 1896. More recently it won the contract to print biometric British passports. Its website says: "De La Rue is the world's largest commercial security printer and papermaker, involved in the production of over 150 national currencies and a wide range of security documents." It continues: "De La Rue also pioneers new technologies in government identity solutions for national identification, driver's licence and passport issuing schemes." The company employs approximately 4,000 people in 24 countries.
