

Breaking News English.com

Portugal bans bosses contacting staff after work – 15th November, 2021

Level 4

Technology is an important part of our lives. It can also be intrusive. Many employers contact employees outside of working hours. This means staff can never completely switch off. Portugal has acted to limit this incursion into workers' lives. A new law bans bosses from messaging workers outside of working hours. It applies to companies with over 10 workers. Any violation of the law is a "serious offense," which could result in a fine.

Portugal introduced the new law after getting many complaints during the lockdowns. More staff are working remotely because of Covid. The government said employers must "respect the privacy of the worker" and give them the tools to work from home. They must also reimburse any costs for increased energy bills. The number of remote workers will nearly double to 32 per cent of the global workforce by the end of 2021, compared to 17 per cent in 2019.

Level 5

Technology is an integral part of our lives. However, it can also be intrusive, especially where work is concerned. Many employers contact employees outside of working hours. This means staff can never entirely switch off. Portugal's government has taken steps to limit this incursion into workers' lives. It has introduced a law that prohibits bosses from contacting workers by email, message or phone outside of working hours. The law applies to companies with more than 10 workers. It states that any violation constitutes a "serious offense," which could result in financial penalties.

Portugal has introduced the new privacy law after receiving many complaints during the lockdowns. An increasing number of employees are working remotely because of COVID-19. A research company estimated that the number of remote workers will nearly double to 32 per cent of the global workforce by the end of 2021, compared to 17 per cent in 2019. The government said: "The employer must respect the privacy of the worker." It must also give employees the appropriate tools to work from home, and reimburse them with any costs leading to increased energy bills.

Level 6

Technology is an integral and often indispensable part of our lives. However, it can also be an intrusive part, especially where the workplace is concerned. Many employers and bosses contact employees outside of working hours. This means staff can never entirely switch off from work. The government in Portugal has taken steps to limit this incursion into the lives of workers. It has introduced a law that prohibits employers and bosses from contacting workers by email, message or phone outside of working hours. The law applies to companies with more than 10 employees. It states that any violation constitutes a "serious offense" and could result in financial penalties.

The Portuguese government has introduced the new privacy law after receiving a deluge of complaints during the coronavirus lockdowns. An increasing number of employees are now working from home remotely because of COVID-19. The research company Gartner estimated that remote workers will nearly double to represent 32 per cent of the global workforce by the end of 2021, compared to 17 per cent in 2019. Portugal's government said: "The employer must respect the privacy of the worker." The new law also requires employers to provide employees with the appropriate tools to work from home, and reimburse them with any costs incurred to assist with increased energy bills.