THE ARTICLE

From <https://breakingnewsenglish.com/2608/260817-exercising-together.html>

New research has found that married couples who exercise together communicate better. Researchers from Brigham Young University in the USA looked at the exercise habits and relationships of 1,693 young married couples. In particular, the research team focused on conflict resolution, the ability to listen to a partner, and the seriousness and frequency of marital issues. Study co-author Professor Jeremy Yorgason suggested that exercising together helped couples sort out problems "peacefully". He added that the effect was small but significant. He said couples reported better communication and fewer problems when they exercised together.

The researchers compared couples exercising separately with couples exercising together. Both individual and shared exercise were associated with healthier marriages. However, couples who exercised together were found to be more successful at resolving marital problems. Professor Yorgason said: "About 60 per cent of husbands and wives in the sample said they exercised, but only about a third exercised together. That means about half the people who exercise are not exercising with their spouse." He added that while the impact was not necessarily large, it was very consistent across couples. The difference gave him the confidence to say that it was affecting relationships "in some meaningful way".

WARM-UPS

1. EXERCISING: Students walk around the class and talk to other students about exercising. Change partners often and share your findings.

2. CHAT: In pairs / groups, talk about these topics or words from the article. What will the article say about them? What can you say about these words and your life?

research / married couples / communication / habits / listen / peacefully / problems / exercise / successful / husbands / wives / spouse / impact / confidence / meaningful

Have a chat about the topics you liked. Change topics and partners frequently.

3. EXERCISING TOGETHER: Students A strongly believe exercising with another person is better than exercising alone; Students B strongly believe the opposite. Change partners again and talk about your conversations.

4. HAPPY TOGETHER: How important are the things in the table in helping couples stay happy? How often do you do these things? Complete this table with your partner(s). Change partners often and share what you wrote.

	Importance	You
Eat together
Say "thank you"
Regular dates
Talk about money
Apologize sincerely
Do housework together

5. MARRIED: Spend one minute writing down all of the different words you associate with the word "married". Share your words with your partner(s) and talk about them. Together, put the words into different categories.

6. EXERCISING TOGETHER: Rank these with your partner. Put the best things about exercising with your spouse/partner at the top. Change partners often and share your rankings.

- Fun
- Time to talk
- Achieve exercise goals
- Quality time together
- Emotional connection
- Feeling good together
- Harder to give up
- Helping each other

New research has found that married couples who exercise together communicate better. Researchers from Brigham Young University in the US looked at the exercise habits and relationships of 1,693 young married couples. In particular, the research team focused on conflict resolution, the ability to listen to a partner, and the seriousness and frequency of marital issues. Study co-author Professor Jeremy Yorgason suggested that exercising together helped couples sort out problems "peacefully". He added that the effect was small but significant. He said couples reported better communication and fewer problems when they exercised together. The researchers compared couples exercising separately with couples exercising together. Both individual and shared exercise were associated with healthier marriages. However, couples who exercised together were found to be more successful at resolving marital problems. Professor Yorgason said: "About 60 percent of husbands and wives in the sample said they exercised, but only about a third exercised together. That means about half the people who exercise are not exercising with their spouse." He added that while the impact was not necessarily large, it was very consistent across couples. The difference gave him the confidence to say that it was affecting relationships "in some meaningful way".
