

Breaking News English.com

Influencers risk shark bites for perfect photo – 20th August 2026

Level 0

Influencers take photos for their followers to see. Some influencers are risking their lives by swimming with sharks. However, people are getting bitten or killed by sharks. A shark expert says there are more shark attacks than ever. He said sharks were wild animals. He said you wouldn't go on safari and put your hand on a lion.

Experts want influencers to stay away from sharks. They say people are getting killed. Last year, a shark bit the hands off a woman when she tried to take a photo of it. Another influencer was killed trying to feed sharks to get them to come closer. Influencers might be sending a dangerous message that it is safe to touch sharks.

Level 1

Many influencers want to take the perfect photograph. They want their followers to see their photos. Some influencers are risking their lives by swimming with sharks. However, things can go wrong. People can be bitten by sharks. The host of the Shark Bytes channel says there are more shark attacks than ever before. He warned that sharks were dangerous predators and wild animals. He added that you wouldn't go on safari and try to put your hand on a lion.

Shark experts are warning influencers to stay away from sharks. They say many people are getting injured or killed. Last year, a shark bit both hands off a woman when she tried to take a photo of it. Two months later, another influencer was killed. He was trying to feed the sharks to get them to come closer. Experts said influencers are sending a dangerous message to their followers. The followers might think it is safe to touch sharks.

Level 2

Many people want to take the perfect photograph. Influencers try hard to do this. They want their followers to see their photos. Some influencers are risking their lives by swimming with sharks. However, things can go wrong and people can be bitten by sharks. The host of the Shark Bytes YouTube channel says he is hearing about "way more" shark attacks than ever before. He warned that sharks were dangerous predators. He said they were very large wild animals. He added: "You wouldn't walk into the Serengeti [on safari] and try to put your hand on the face of a lion."

Shark experts are warning influencers to stay away from sharks. They say many people try to photograph sharks and then get injured or killed. Last year, a shark bit both hands off a woman when she tried to take a photo of it. Her husband tried to protect her. He said it was a "living nightmare". Two months later, another influencer was killed. He was trying to feed the sharks to get them to come closer, but they attacked him. Experts said influencers are sending a dangerous message to their followers because the followers might think it is safe to touch sharks.

Level 3

Many people do their best to take the perfect photograph. In particular, influencers are trying hard to do this. They want all their fans and followers to see their photos. Some influencers are risking their lives by swimming with and touching sharks. Naturally, things can go wrong. One example of this is a rise in the number of people bitten by sharks. The host of the Shark Bytes YouTube channel, Kristian Parton, says he is worried. He is hearing about "way more" shark attacks than ever before. He warned: "We're talking about a true apex predator – a very large wild animal." He added: "You wouldn't walk into the Serengeti [on safari] and try to put your hand on the face of a lion."

Shark experts are warning influencers to stay away from sharks. They point to a number of stories of people trying to photograph sharks and then getting injured or killed. Last year, a woman in the Caribbean had both hands bitten off when she tried to take a photo of a bull shark. Her husband tried to protect her. He called the incident a "living nightmare". Two months later, an influencer was killed in Israel. He was trying to feed the sharks to get them to come closer, but they attacked him. The shark experts said the influencers are sending a dangerous message to their followers. They said this was because the followers might think it is safe to touch or even try to ride sharks.