THE ARTICLE

From <https://breakingnewsenglish.com/2609/260910-birdsong-and-traffic-noise.html>

Listening to birds singing has a positive effect on our mental health and well-being. Birdsong is one of the most beautiful sounds in nature. Conversely, noise from traffic is annoying and can increase our stress. A new study from the University of Surrey in the UK suggests that the noise from traffic may reduce the positive effects of birdsong on our mood. Environmental psychologist Dr Eleanor Ratcliffe said: "Traffic noise undoubtedly affects the psychological benefits of natural soundscapes." She said we need to think more carefully about adding green spaces to towns, "so that people enjoy such areas to the fullest". She also suggested lowering speed limits near parks.

More than 1,500 people took part in the study. They listened to nine different soundscapes of natural sounds and traffic noise. The people then answered questions about how relaxed and refreshed they felt after listening to the sounds. The researchers found that listening to birdsong benefited well-being. However, even at low levels, traffic noise reduced feelings of well-being. Researcher Dr Melissa Marselle said the modern world is noisy. She said we need to investigate the impact of traffic noise on nature's sounds and whether it negatively affects their benefits. She added that we need to identify more quiet outdoor spaces to help people who are feeling stressed.

WARM-UPS

1. BIRDSONG: Students walk around the class and talk to other students about birdsong. Change partners often and share your findings.

2. CHAT: In pairs / groups, talk about these topics or words from the article. What will the article say about them? What can you say about these words and your life?

birds / mental health / birdsong / nature / traffic noise / stress / mood / green spaces natural sounds / the modern world / noisy / benefits / outdoor spaces / researcher

Have a chat about the topics you liked. Change topics and partners frequently.

3. MORE BIRDS: Students A strongly believe countries should breed more birds and release them into towns; Students B strongly believe that's unnecessary. Change partners again and talk about your conversations.

4. SOUNDS OF NATURE: What do you think of these sounds? How do they make you feel? Complete this table with your partner(s). Change partners often and share what you wrote.

Sound	What I Think	How I Feel
Birdsong
Ocean waves
Falling rain
Buzzing insects
Waterfalls
The wind

5. NATURE: Spend one minute writing down all of the different words you associate with the word "nature". Share your words with your partner(s) and talk about them. Together, put the words into different categories.

6. WELL-BEING NATURE: Rank these with your partner. Put the best things for our well-being at the top. Change partners often and share your rankings.

- Birdsong
- Sunlight
- Trees
- Rivers
- Flowers
- Mountains
- Beaches
- Puppies and kittens

Listening to birds singing has a positive effect on our mental health and well-being. Birdsong is one of the most beautiful sounds in nature. Conversely, noise from traffic is annoying and can increase our stress. A new study from the University of Surrey in the UK suggests that the noise from traffic may reduce the positive effects of birdsong on our mood. Environmental psychologist Dr Eleanor Ratcliffe said: "Traffic noise undoubtedly affects the psychological benefits of natural soundscapes." She said we need to think more carefully about adding green space to towns, "so that people enjoy such areas to the fullest". She also suggested lowering speed limits near parks. More than 1,500 people took part in the study. They listened to one of two different soundscapes of natural sounds and traffic noise. The people then answered questions about how relaxed and refreshed they felt after listening to the sounds. The researchers found that listening to birdsong benefited well-being. However, even at low levels, traffic noise reduced feelings of well-being. Researcher Dr Melissa Marselles said the modern world is noisy. She said we need to investigate the impact of traffic noise on nature's sounds and whether it negatively affects their benefits. She added that we need to identify more quiet outdoor space to help people who are feeling stressed.
